

Changing the Way We Do Food Will Save the Climate Movement

Climate activism narrowly focused on electrifying our economy and reducing emissions, even if successful in those areas, still leads to ruin. On the other hand, by integrating climate justice and food sovereignty into our climate work, we have the potential to change the playing field itself. This approach can create pathways that circumvent and restructure the systems that created the crises we face. As Audre Lorde famously said, “For the master’s tools will never dismantle the master’s house. They may allow us to temporarily beat him at his own game, but they will never enable us to bring about genuine change.” We will look at work happening in Louisville, Kentucky, to help illustrate this approach and we will harvest examples of change strategies from participants and examine them through this lens. Finally, we’ll consider how to apply these lessons to our own settings and engagements.

Andrew Kang Bartlett, national associate for the Presbyterian Hunger Program, will present and lead this dialogue about food and climate. We will look at the levels of engagement, from inner work to international solidarity, as well as the tools and approaches that can move us toward justice and God’s vision of the Beloved Community.

Date: Tuesday, January 18, 2022

Time: 7:30—8:30 p.m. EST

This virtual workshop will be offered FREE of Charge. For more information, and to register, please visit: presbyearthcare.org/food-and-climate/

Changing the Way We Do Food Will Save the Climate Movement

Climate activism narrowly focused on electrifying our economy and reducing emissions, even if successful in those areas, still leads to ruin. On the other hand, by integrating climate justice and food sovereignty into our climate work, we have the potential to change the playing field itself. This approach can create pathways that circumvent and restructure the systems that created the crises we face. As Audre Lorde famously said, “For the master’s tools will never dismantle the master’s house. They may allow us to temporarily beat him at his own game, but they will never enable us to bring about genuine change.” We will look at work happening in Louisville, Kentucky, to help illustrate this approach and we will harvest examples of change strategies from participants and examine them through this lens. Finally, we’ll consider how to apply these lessons to our own settings and engagements.

Andrew Kang Bartlett, national associate for the Presbyterian Hunger Program, will present and lead this dialogue about food and climate. We will look at the levels of engagement, from inner work to international solidarity, as well as the tools and approaches that can move us toward justice and God’s vision of the Beloved Community.

Date: Tuesday, January 18, 2022

Time: 7:30—8:30 p.m. EST

This virtual workshop will be offered FREE of Charge. For more information, and to register, please visit: presbyearthcare.org/food-and-climate/

